Annual Baseball Ballyhoo Campaign Nears. Senators, Changed Here and There, Are Ready.

By FRANCIS E. STAN.

HE week will mark the opening, for Washington, of that highly publicized period known as spring baseball training. For an outlay authoritatively estimated at $20,000, a clubowner sends Southward an assorted collection of ball players, and in return he receives probably $100,000 worth of tub thumping in the public prints and over the radio. He also gets his players in condition The fine shape they could attain in two conscientious weeks they manage comfortably in seven and nobody

Mr. Clark Griffith's Senators will return to Orlando, a sleepy Central Florida township with 32 lakes and a typically conscientious chamber of commerce. Already Mr. G. and several of his ball players are on the premises and the remainder of what the old gentleman is pleased to call his "first squad" will entrain this week. Next Sunday, with a figurative rolling of the drums and a blaring of trumpets, the curtain will rise to reveal a weird conglomeration of overfed veterans and clumsy kids whose names are always Joe, as far as their immediate big-league futures are

Baseball is the only sport which commands this kind of attention. Its disciples in the North closely follow every move. The $1,400-a-year Government clerk suffers with his favorite outfielder when the clubowner cuts the player's salary from $18,000 to $16,000 for the season. Hope is always high and the studied optimism of people like Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris is gulped and reflected at the home base, hundreds of miles away. A great charitable wave engulfs the fan, and the pitcher he called a confirmed bum in August assumes a new importance. "This might be his year," says the fan. It is what they call whacky in our set, but, withal, it is true of base-

Griffs Aren't Quite the Same Club.

HAVE no way of knowing what the interest in Mr. Griffith's 1938 outfit is at this time. Washington ran a steady sixth in the American League race last year and for one reason or another the local brass hats made no radical moves at the winter trade mart. While Cleveland recently was getting its long-sought catcher in Rollie Hemsley, Boston was acquiring a good outfielder in Joe Vosmik, Chicago was landing Gerry Walker, Detroit was adding Pitcher Vernon Kennedy and the Yankees and Browns were announcing the shifting of various players, Mr. Griffith did little, voluntarily or otherwise.

Yet as curtain hour nears and you look back a year, there is a face here and there that wasn't on hand last winter. Behind the bat, f'rinstance. Out of Orlando last year poured reams of copy and scores of photographers' plates, all publicizing the efforts of J. Francis Hogan to reduce. Hogan, who was called Shanty, was to have been Washington's first-string catcher. I recall Mr. Harris saying, as camp opened, that Hogan was the "key man" among the Senators. He may have been correct. The ball club never got started, and early in May they had dispatched Shanty to the minors.

This spring Rick Ferrell will be head man of the catchers. Until last season Rick rightfully belonged among the best backstops in baseball. His hitting fell off, probably due to finger injuries, but even off his 1937 performance Ferrell is a better catcher than Hogan.

Almada Now Has Chapman's Job.

SO TO the infield, but here are no changes in personnel. Buddy Lewis, Cecil Travis, Buddy Myer and either Joey Kuhel or Jimmy Wasdell at first base. That's the way it was a year ago, but with less emphasis on Wasdell than is due now. Mr. Griffith deviated from custom when he openly placed Kuhel on the trading block this winter. His efforts to swap Joey were no secret. Kuhel may accept the attempt philosophically, for baseball is like that. Or he may sulk and wish that Washington would trade him. And as for Wasdell, only a season at facing major league pitchers will make or Gone from the outfield is Ben Chapman, the speedy Alabaman who complained during spring training that he couldn't find his batting eye and who never recovered it until Griffith traded him to Boston. In exchange Washington got Melo Almada, who, like Chapman, couldn't hit until he switched clubs. Melo batted well over .300 for Washington. There is a suspicion he played over his head. That will be another matter to be taken up when May pushes April off the calendar and the June stretch looms.

Messrs. Griffith and Harris thought they had a fine right-handed hitter in Freddie Sington this time a year ago. Freddie was slated for the clean-up spot, too. But it did not take long to prove that Sington was not a major leaguer. Ouch! That hurt. So Griff bought Al Simmons for $7,500, paid him twice that sum in salary, and in return got $22,500 worth of hustle. I mean, Al wasn't the old Simmons in ability by a long shot.

Mr. G. Likes His Kid Outfielder.

SIMMONS will return, if he signs his contract, but Griffith and Harris say they aren't counting on him to play regularly. The old gentleman lists heavily to the side of Rookie George Washington Case. There is a historical combination for you. George Washington Case from Trenton.

Young George Washington almost became, to be screamingly funny, a strange Case. That was last summer, when Griff bought him from Trenton. It seemed that George wanted part of his sale price or it was no sale. Mr. G. was dumbfounded and Master Case left in a huff. They reached an agreement later and now the stanchest supporter of Master Case, outside of himself,

And so to the pitching staff. A year ago Buck Newsom was huffing and puffing in Orlando. This year Wes Ferrell will wear Buck's uniform and assume Newsom's position in rank. Wes has no inferiority complex, either, but Mr. Harris confidently suggests that he is a better pitcher than

Here and there are more changes-minor ones, but, withal, changes. That's the way with baseball. The waters run swift. Mr. Griffith apparently stood pat on a sixth-place ball club. But over the course of a full year

JEFFRA IS 6 TO 5 TO RETAIN TITLE

Escobar Boasts He'll Land Kayo to Regain Crown. Gate Disappoints.

By the Associated Press.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Feb. 19.-Champion Harry Jeffra, the ex-golf bag toter from Baltimore, ruled a 6-to-5 favorite tonight to retain his bantamweight crown in tomorrow's 15ound bout with Sixto Escobar here Despite the little Puerto Rican's flat statement that he not only expects to York last summer, but will be out for a kneckout victory, the betting fraternity made the titleholder the wagering choice as both wound up their training grinds. The fighters weigh in for the bout at 10 a.m. (Eastern standard time) tomorrow, with the mill slated for 9 p.m. (Eastern standard time) in the Escambron baseball park. Expectations are Escobar will tip the beam at 117 pounds, with the champion just making the 118-pound limit.

Gate Disappointing. Although a last-minute rush for tickets swamped the box office, crowd predictions were revised downward, with indications that the gate would gross under $25,000, some $10,000 short of previous calculations.

The last hitch in the fight arrange ments was overcome today when Nat Fleischer, editor of the Ring Magazine, withdrew from nomination as one of the judges to permit the Jeffra camp to select Ned Brown, former New York boxing writer, to sit in his seat. This made way for selection by the sports commission of a local man as the other judge. Johnny McAvoy, veteran New York "third man," already has been named as referee.

Tomorrow's bout is Escobar's third crack at the 118-pound laurels. He won the United States National Boxing Association ranking as titleholder in 1934, then dropped the crown in 1935 and regained it in 1937 before the 22year-old Jeffra gave him a going over in the "Carnival of Champions" in New York last September.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Feb. 19.-Lanky Burleigh Jacobs, iron-nerved schoolboy of Wauwatosa, Wis., topped off a week of spectacular shooting today by winning the championship of the golf champions tournament.

As a climax to the giant-killing role he has played all week. Jacobs turned back Frank Strafaci of Great Neck, N. Y., one of the country's leading
